

Therapy with a global reach

When a mother and daughter came to Cornwall recently from the UK seeking help for pain and suffering both endured for years, they were hopeful but were not expecting the outcome they received. After a 2 week stay and treatments from Innovative Therapy Canada, both returned home ecstatic that their problems had been identified and resolved.

Glenn Cameron, owner of Innovative Therapy Canada, is blind. Ordinarily, that would prove to be a difficult challenge to overcome, but Cameron did so and in a big way. He has taken his blindness, one that has given him an extraordinary sense of touch, and become a brilliant therapist achieving an extremely high success rate in those whom he treats. His "think outside the box" attitude and sheer determination to solve difficult issues in people has resulted in him developing non-surgical solutions for a great many debilitating conditions affecting so many lives.

Cameron's highly successful and innovative approach to therapy has evolved over the years for two reasons. His amazing tactile sense is put to work during the assessment process accurately identifying conditions responsible for the pain and dysfunction one experiences. Then Cameron quickly resolve these conditions using unique and highly innovative protocols he developed integrating magnetic therapy with shockwave therapy, an acoustic (sound) wave technology more widely known to break apart kidney stones.

This therapeutic approach allows Cameron to solve some of the most difficult conditions which can affect the quality of one's life.

Although he is a leader in his field, his expertise didn't just develop because of his lack of sight. Along with his tactile skills, he brings to Innovative Therapy Canada an intense determination to help everyone he treats. He is constantly upgrading his knowledge base, taking courses with advanced training in Canada and the United States, striving to learn everything the world has to offer with modern therapy. Treating and solving difficult cases people present with, keeps Cameron's mind sharp, achieving a high level of skill as a therapist.

Since he established Innovative Therapy Canada, Cameron and his clinic has gained an international curiosity for its outstanding achievements and highly effective non-surgical solutions. He offers treatment for a variety of conditions too numerous to list, but some of which include shoulder rotator cuff injuries, back and knee pain, a multitude of foot problems, pinched nerves causing pins/needles sensations into arms and legs, scar tissue in arms/legs or abdomen due to surgical procedures, and hip/knee replacement surgery.

Word of Cameron's successes reached Europe, and in 2016 he welcomed the European district manager from EMS, the manufacturer of his state-of-the-art shockwave devices, and the world's leading shockwave therapy research/development engineer from Germany, anxious to witness for themselves what Cameron was doing. They witnessed Cameron treat carpal tunnel, frozen shoulder, and a bunion.

Cornwall is a great city to live in and now it has also become a preferred destination for therapy that people can't seem to get.
